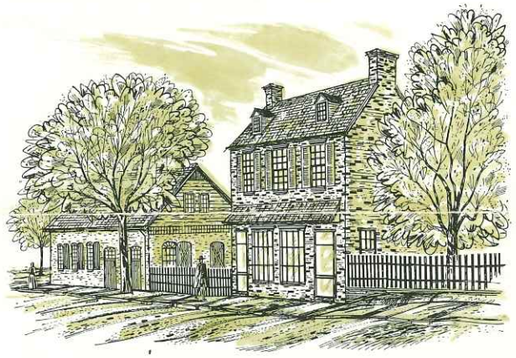
The John Vogler Group



SALEM, North Carolina, was settled in 1766 by the Moravians, who were a practical and religious people. Fundamentally craftsmen, with meticulous attention to detail, they built their congregation-town according to a neatly preconceived plan, with the church as its focal point.

The word SALEM means "Peace"; and the sturdy brick houses around the Square escaped unharmed through both the Revolutionary and the Civil wars. Friendly relations were enjoyed between the Moravians and surrounding Indians; and no major fire ever destroyed the village. Because of this, OLD SALEM may be seen today almost exactly as it was in the mid-1800s, with many of its original structures now in the process of restoration.

One of the dwellings now open to the public is the JOHN VOGLER House (1819), the home of the village silversmith and clockmaker. In it may be seen pieces of furniture belonging to the Vogler family, as well as several unusual solid-back chairs thought to have been made by John Vogler. It has many original features, setting it apart from its neighbors, for example the pointed A-shaped hood over its front doorway as opposed to the rounded hooded doors seen everywhere in Salem.

By 1854, not far from the central Square, industrious men were starting new businesses. UNIQUE FURNITURE MAKERS traces its history as master woodworkers in the community back to that date, over one hundred years ago.

While treasuring its past, UNIQUE keeps pace with modern ideas and adapts its fine furniture to 20th Century living. The elegant simplicity, the warm, rich finish and the inner beauty that you do not see in the picture—the integrity of fine craftsmanship—all combine to make pieces of the JOHN VOGLER GROUP ones you will want to collect and hand down to your children's children.

In planning your decorating schemes, remember that your OLD SALEM PIECES will look best against the lighter tones of color; soft grays, Adam green, Williamsburg blue, for example. Wallpaper design should not be too delicate in pattern. Good taste in Early American room settings is like the design of the JOHN VOGLER GROUP: simple and unaffected.
